How to automatically send a desktop application to a user when they click the executable? I do not want to store the application in an autostart folder, as I like to keep the applications I use in one folder. I use Ubuntu 13.04. A: You could have a "Launch file" in an icon on your desktop, where the application is specified as an argument, like this: Executable /path/to/Application Arguments "--something-to-say" If that's not the solution you were looking for, are you trying to make the launcher more than just a shortcut? Or perhaps you want to send the user the file if it is not in the user's home, and then just set it to be in the users home folder? Ubuntu has an application folder, you can add your application there, and it will be available in the launcher. This is what it looks like: If you open a terminal, you can browse the desktop like this: `cd ~/Desktop/` Or, since it's a /folder/, you can browse to it: `cd ~/Desktop/` If you want to send your users the file with the program, you can set the icon to be the icon of your program, and set the launcher to point to the location of the file. In the terminal, you can set it up like this: `shopt -s dotglob set -e e79caf774b`
